How Steinfeld Recovered His Box.

On Christmas day a young man entered the clothing store of J. Steinfeld, No. 2123 Main atreet, and purchased a pair of socks, which he stated to the clerk in attendance he desired to put on, as his feet were damp. For the purpose of exchanging his socks he retired to the back part of the store. After his departure a leather box containing over $300 in money, a ring valued at $50, some sliver teaspoons and sugar tweezers, a silver watch chain, and some bank books and insurance papers, which had been left lying upon a shelf in the rear of the store, were found to be missing. A liberal reward was offered for the apprehension of the thief and the recovery of the valuables, but to no purpose. How Steinfrld Recovered His Box intend to quit business on the first of April, now offer all goods in my line at cost. My sebold goods and furniture are offered at pri-

A few days since the box was found underneath a whock of corn, in a field about one mile west of Bridgeport. In the box were found the bank books and insurance papers, and several silver watch chains, with a scrap of paper upon

"Please return this box to J. Steinfeld, clothier, 2123 Main street."

The box was returned to Mr. Steinfeld, as directed. There is no clue to the

Good FOR-NOTHING .- For several days GOD-POR-NOTHING.—For several days past there have appeared on the streets several remarkable individuals with powers of speech that would do credit to a member of Congress, who have been selling the most remarkable cement under the aun, which was of such powerful adhesive quality that a crowbar glued to a lamp-post with it would part in twain before the glue would give way. It was claimed that it would resist tent, cold, fire, water, air, acids and spirits, and be perfectly invulnerable to all the "elements" combined. The cement has been proven a miserable swindle by a time Postmaster at Grafton.

Col. Rath Goshen, Deakin's giant, was left behind by the company, and did not get may until yesterday. He left for and is not equal to the samples shown by sellers, which are evidently good for something.
